7 Read the article about employee global secondments. Choose the best sentence from A–H to fill each of the gaps. Do not use any letter more than once. There is an example at the beginning.

Working abroad – what’s stopping you?

The modern international world of work offers a range of opportunities to adventurous workers who feel the pull of travel. <sup>0</sup>.....F..... Things have changed now and international companies have offices spread out all over the globe. There are all sorts of exciting employment prospects and great places to live.

<sup>1</sup> .....

The first thing to do is to think about your personality. Some people are far more suited to living in another culture than others and this is largely based on the expectations you have of your life. <sup>2</sup>..... In addition, you should be able to adapt to new situations without too much stress. However, people can fall into the trap of thinking that these requirements are only true for cultures which are very different from their home culture. It should be recognised that moving anywhere can be difficult.

Similarly, it would be a mistake to focus too much on the extreme cultural differences. For example, some people may be afraid of moving somewhere because of possible communication barriers, but this is not something to be overly concerned about. <sup>4</sup>.....

Companies tend also to have immersion programmes to help you learn survival phrases or they can provide long- or short-term teachers. While it’s important to be self-reliant and independent in order to settle into a new life and job abroad, remember that international companies are used to managing secondments and work placements overseas. <sup>5</sup>..... In fact, it is often said that making friends and settling in to a new country is easier than doing it in an unfamiliar city in your own country.

<sup>6</sup>..... Office etiquette is an example. Although you may feel confident in your ability to do your job, cultural norms in offices can vary widely across cultures. It is worth finding out typical working hours, forms of address for co-workers and meal arrangements for example. <sup>7</sup>..... Understanding how your daily life will be at work will go a long way to helping you decide if this is the right move for you or not.

Finally, bear in mind that part of working abroad is about expanding your life, embracing new challenges and overcoming difficult situations. The experience will undoubtedly have ups and downs, but it will definitely make you stronger as a person and more employable as a result.

A There will always be others around to help and advise you.

B It is clear that you would need to be fairly open-minded and flexible to live abroad.

C Plenty of people have enjoyed working in another country without being fluent in the local language.

D However, before embarking on a work placement in another country, it is vital to assess whether it is right for you.

E All of these aspects can impact your experience – either positively or negatively.

F In the past only diplomats, engineers and people in the travel industry tended to travel for work.

G This is true even if the new culture seems familiar or not too different from your own.

H Factors which may be considered less are those connected to the workplace itself.
