

Persuasive Writing Planning Persuasive Writing

Purpose:

To persuade your reader to understand your point of view by using a range of features.

Use this sheet to plan your persuasive writing. Use bullet points or short sentences to organise your ideas.

Introduction

Introduce your topic and your opinion. Hook your audience by using things like rhetorical questions, emotive OR logical language, or use some snappy key facts.

Body Paragraph One

Each paragraph can be a supporting point for your point of view. Make sure each section has a statement, an explanation and an example.

First point: _____

Conclusion

Summarise your points for your topic and restate your opinion. Leave your reader with something to think about — for example, you could repeat your opening rhetorical question.

Persuasive Writing Planning

Purpose:

To persuade your reader to understand your point of view by using a range of features.

Use this sheet to plan your persuasive writing. Use bullet points or short sentences to organise your ideas.

Introduction

Introduce your topic and your opinion. Hook your audience by using things like rhetorical questions, emotive OR logical language, or use some snappy key facts.

Body Paragraph One

Each paragraph can be a supporting point for your point of view. Make sure each section has a statement, an explanation and an example.

First point: _____

Body Paragraph Two

Each paragraph can be a supporting point for your point of view. Make sure each section has a statement, an explanation and an example.

Second point: _____

Conclusion

Summarise your points for your topic and restate your opinion. Leave your reader with something to think about – for example, you could repeat your opening rhetorical question.

Persuasive Writing Planning Persuasive Writing

Purpose:

To persuade your reader to understand your point of view by using a range of features.

Use this sheet to plan your persuasive writing. Use bullet points or short sentences to organise your ideas.

Topic: _____

Introduction

Introduce your topic and your opinion. Hook your audience by using things like rhetorical questions, emotive OR logical language, or use some snappy key facts.

Body Paragraph One

Each paragraph can be a supporting point for your point of view. Make sure each section has a statement, an explanation and an example.

First point: _____

Body Paragraph Two

Each paragraph can be a supporting point for your point of view. Make sure each section has a statement, an explanation and an example.

Second point: _____

Body Paragraph Three

Each paragraph can be a supporting point for your point of view. Make sure each section has a statement, an explanation and an example.

Third point: _____

Conclusion

Summarise your points for your topic and restate your opinion. Leave your reader with something to think about — for example, you could repeat your opening rhetorical question.